NOT YOUR GRANDMA'S SHERRY

GROWERS

It is named in honor of the Roman name for the city of Cadiz, the oldest city in Europe. This solera, which was until recently housed in El Puerto de Santa Maria, contains a total of 8 "botas" from which only a small amount is drawn every year. The median age of the solera is 30 years, which means that the newest wine added to the solera is at least 30 years old.

LAND

The triangle of towns (Jerez, Sanlucar de Barrameda, and Puerto de Santa Maria) forms the DO of Sherry in Spain. Within this area, the Pedro Ximenez (PX for short) produces the richer, sweeter Sherries.

FARMING

With Sherry, a solera moves a portion of aging wine from younger to older barrels. This way, the older wines 'inform' the younger wines introduced to their barrel, and the oldest barrels always have some hint of the original wines laid down to age. A bota in sherry holds approx 500 liters (132 gallons).

WINE

The Sherry Hound discovered these 8 Botas in a Bodega dating back to 1783. We don't know exactly how old these Botas are, but we are pretty sure they haven't been tapped in 30 years! This is a PX of unique character and depth. Layers of dried fig and coffee unfold and reveal themselves as you savor the complex flavors.
